PECFA Claims #53186-6826-05A & B
Hearing Nos. 97-187 and 98-60

A decision of the department regarding the Petroleum Environmental Cleanup Act (PECFA) was issued on October 24, 1997, denying reimbursement for certain portions of the appellant's claim. The appellant filed a timely appeal on November 24, 1997. A second determination was issued on April 22, 1998, and the appellant filed a timely appeal to that determination on May 22, 1998. The two matters were consolidated for hearing. A hearing on the appellant's appeals was held on July 15, 1999, before Administrative Law Judge Karen L. Godshall. Following the hearing, written briefs were received from the appellant and the respondent department. The matter is now ready for a proposed decision.

The issue presented for decision is whether the department's decisions were incorrect in applying a fifty percent cost allocation methodology to the appellant's claims.

PROPOSED FINDINGS OF FACT

The appellant is the owner of a site which was previously a vehicle service facility. There were four underground storage tanks at the site. The two larger tanks include a 10,000-gallon and a 6,000-gallon gasoline tanks. The two smaller tanks, each holding 550 gallons, include one fuel oil tank and one waste oil tank. In 1993, the two smaller tanks were removed and the site assessed for contamination. There were some small holes in the tanks and soil contamination was found at the site. The consultant notified the Wisconsin Department of Natural Resources of the contamination, and a site investigation was begun. Remediation continued through later 1995, at which point it was considered successfully concluded.

The appellant submitted a claim to the PECFA program, seeking reimbursement of the costs of investigation and remediation. The claim submission related to work done in connection with the removal of the two smaller tanks and there was no mention of the two larger gasoline tanks as being a source of contamination. The first decision by the PECFA program was issued on October 24, 1997. That decision permitted reimbursement of fifty percent of the amount sought, on the basis that the costs were the result of contamination from one eligible tank (the waste oil tank) and one ineligible tank (the fuel oil tank) in equal proportion. After the first decision was issued, the appellant, through its consultant, communicated with the department and proposed a different cost allocation. The consultant proposed that the costs be allocated among all four of the tanks on the site, using the assumption that the contamination had originated with all four of the tanks. Since only one small tank contained ineligible fuels, the consultant sought to have the vast majority of costs reimbursed, and only 3.2 percent considered ineligible.

The second decision and appeal in this matter relates to the same site, and differs from the first primarily in that the second concerns costs incurred in a later stage of remediation, while the first related primarily to investigation-stage costs. In both cases, the department has indicated its unwillingness to accept the new formula advanced by the appellant for the cost allocation, and has limited reimbursement to fifty percent of the amount sought.

APPLICABLE ADMINISTRATIVE RULES

Since the issue presented is the appropriateness of the allocation of costs as determined by the department, two administrative rules are particularly on point.

Section ILHR 47.30(4) provides in part as follows

When a contamination is identified which contains both eligible and ineligible products under the fund, only the costs associated with the eligible products may be claimed. Eligible costs of remediation, which are only associated with the eligible product, may be claimed in their entirety, as specified in this section.

Section ILHR 47.33(2)(c) provides

If a contamination is identified which contains both eligible and ineligible products, the owner or operator and the department shall be notified immediately. The consultant, in conjunction with the owner or operator, shall establish a methodology for dividing the costs of remediation between the eligible and ineligible products. The approach used to divide the costs of remediation shall be approved by the department prior to the submittal of the claim.

PROPOSED DISCUSSION and CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

The burden of proving that the denial of reimbursement was incorrect is upon the appellant, as both parties agree. The appellant must prove that the denial was unreasonable, which is a substantial burden.

In the testing and monitoring of the site in question, a number of monitoring wells were established. At one of those wells, contaminants were found which suggested contamination from gasoline products. There was conflicting evidence offered as to whether that contamination originated from the two gasoline tanks on the site. No release from those tanks was ever reported, and the focus of the investigation and remediation was on the fuel oil and waste oil tanks. Even the witnesses testifying on behalf of the appellant were uncertain why any monitoring wells had been installed in the area of the gasoline tanks. There are a variety of explanations for the GRO (gasoline range organics) which were detected in the one well, including surface spills or even testing errors. The evidence presented by the appellant does not establish with any reasonable degree of certainty or even of probability that the gasoline tanks were the source of the contamination.

In addition to its failure to establish that the gasoline tanks on site were a source of the contamination, the appellant also has failed to establish that the appellant or its consultant complied with the administrative rule requirement that a proposed allocation methodology be provided to the department in advance of the claim submission. In fact, it does not appear that the appellant is even contending that it met that requirement, although it argues that some information concerning the possibility of gasoline contamination was offered prior to the issuance of the second departmental decision. Given the information which was available to the department at the time of the claim submission and review, and at the time of its decisions, it was entirely reasonable for the department to focus its review on the contamination from the two smaller tanks which were removed and to conclude that one-half of the submitted costs should be allocated to the ineligible fuel oil tank and its contents.

PROPOSED DECISION

The department's decisions of October 24, 1997 and April 22, 1998, utilizing a fifty per cent cost allocation methodology for reimbursement of the appellants claims are affirmed.
